Macroeconomic & Corporate News

Gov't draws up 3-stage plan to bail out economy

The Economic and Social Council on Saturday revealed additional details pertaining to the economic recovery plan submitted to Prime Minister and Minister of Defence Bisher Al Khasawneh a month ago, the Jordan News Agency, Petra, reported. The three-stage plan was designed to bail the national economy out of the repercussions of the pandemic, aiming to achieve integration among all sectors and shore up hard-hit sectors according to priority. Support provided within the framework of the plan ranged from immediate support to labour and economic sectors, complementary support for various sectors to enable the rapid recovery of the economy, and integrated support to vital sectors that paves paths for sustainable economic growth. Each phase included a number of programmes and initiatives that will be launched together each time in the form of packages. Each package would be implemented over a period of two months, provided that the impact is measured monthly, and achievement rates are determined. Each package aims at the continuation of business activities in various sectors, mainly targeting the employer and workers, with the aim of increasing the activity of the facility or institution or company and maintaining its existence, preserving employment, and the possibility of expanding its activity, according to Petra.

Finance minister, US treasury secretary talk cooperation

Minister of Finance Minister Mohamad Al-Ississ in a phone call on Saturday discussed economic updates with the US Secretary of the Treasury Janet Yellen, the Jordan News Agency, Petra, reported. The Jordanian minister first lauded the continuous support provided by the US to Jordan. He also discussed the latest economic developments, especially what the world is suffering from as a result of the pandemic. Reviewing the measures taken by the government to combat the pandemic and mitigate its health and economic ramifications, he focused on the most prominent features of the structural reform programme that the government is committed to in order to achieve economic recovery. Describing high unemployment rates as “the government's biggest concern”, he stressed the need to accelerate economic growth and reduce business costs borne by the private sector to create more job opportunities. Yellen referred to the vitality of cooperation, voicing her aspirations of furthering common interests. She also highlighted the need to overcome challenges such as ending the pandemic and shifting attention to economic recovery along with other urgent issues, stressing the significance of maintaining the strong relation between the two countries. Yellen confirmed the continuation of her country's support to Jordan's journey of reform and economic development, Petra reported.
